Virginia Euwer Wolff (1937-)

By Susan Fletcher

Virginia Euwer Wolff, a celebrated author of young adult literature, grew up in a large, hand-built log house in the shadow of Mount Hood. Her father, Eugene Courtney Euwer, had given up his Pennsylvania law practice in 1911 to grow fruit in Oregon's Hood River Valley. Her uncle, poet and painter Anthony Euwer, moved to Oregon that same year. He wrote and illustrated for the Oregon Journal as well as for Harpers, Colliers, and other national publications.

Wolff was born in Portland on August 25, 1937. Her father died when she was five, and her mother, Florence, worked the farm while raising Wolff and her older brother in a home full of music, books, and paintings. "From our backyard we had a towering view of Mt. Hood . . . with snow on it all year round," Wolff writes. "From our front lawn on a clear day we could see three more of the Cascades."

Wolff is "a master stylist," writes Roger Sutton, editor-in-chief of The Horn Book Magazine. Her groundbreaking novels are notable for "their emotional intensity, for their innovation, and for characters that 'grab hold and won't let go.'" The difficulties of life are relentless for Wolff's protagonists, who are often outsiders, and her work tunes in to the "fragile, trembling balance" of "Insider and Outsider language."

An accomplished violinist, Wolff has been part of several Portland orchestras and chamber groups. Music influences her writing "every day, all day," she writes. "Music touches the human heart with all its overwhelming sense of tragedy all the time, . . . when I'm combining some little impulses in my mind with the great ideas I'm hearing across the room from the great minds of the past, then I find I do have something to say."

True Believer earned the National Book Award for young people's literature in 2001. Among Wolff's other accolades are the Golden Kite Award, the PEN-West Book Award, the International Reading Association Award, the Jane Addams Award, the Michael L. Printz Honor, the Oregon Library Association's Evelyn Sibley Lampman Award, and two Oregon Book Awards. Bat 6 was chosen by the Oregon Library Association as the Oregon Reads 2009 selection for young adult readers.
