Media

CCC Civilian Conservation Corps. Video. Call# SD144.O7 C33 2008

Five days after his inauguration, President Franklin D. Roosevelt called an emergency session of Congress to install the Civilian Conservation Corps -- known as the CCC. The program targeted unemployed young men, veterans and American Indians who were hard hit by the Great Depression. The "CCC boys," as they were called, were required to send a portion of their money home to their parents. In addition to their wage, the boys received free education, healthcare and job training. Oregon hosted dozens of CCC camps all over the state.

Celilo Falls and the Remaking of the Columbia River. DVD. Call# F853.C4 2007

Provides an historical overview of the economic and social importance of Celilo Falls of the Columbia River to Native Americans of the Pacific Northwest, and the impacts upon that group that resulted from the erection of the Dalles Dam.

Empire of the Bay: Ambition, Wealth, and the Hudson's Bay Company. Video Streaming. 2000.

This program chronicles the epic history of the Hudson's Bay Company, the world's oldest continuous commercial enterprise still in existence. Adapted from Peter C. Newman's best-seller and narrated by former NewsHour anchor Robert MacNeil, this story of exploration and exploitation uses stunning photography as well as paintings, drawings, maps, journals, and memoirs to tell the company's story in the authentic voice of the people who were a part of it.

Good Work Sister!: Woman Shipyard Workers of WWII, an Oral History. Video. Call # D810.W7 G7 2006

Women tell of their personal experiences in the shipyards at Portland, Or. and Vancouver, Wash., and the difficulties confronting them when they took over jobs during World War II which had traditionally been considered men's, and their continuing responsibility for child-raising and housework.

Last days of Celilo. Video. Call# E98.F4 L38 1988

Describes the effect of a 1957 Columbia River dam construction on the Celilo falls and local Indian fishing.

Local Color. DVD. Call # HT1581.L63 1991

This 1991 OPB documentary chronicles the little known history of racism in Oregon and the story of people who worked for civil rights. Jon Tuttle was a news reporter in Portland who set out to document the story but found he was almost too late as some of the important participants had died and others were getting on in age.

"No perfect answers": the life and architecture of Pietro Belluschi. DVD. Call #NA737.B43 A47 1996

Provides a visual tour of Belluschi's early homes and churches; simple, modern designs that define the unique architectural style of the Pacific Northwest. Rich with comments from Belluschi himself, the film also features interviews with a number of noted architects, including I.M. Pei and Philip Johnson.

Pendleton Round-up: The Wild West Way. Video. Call # GV1834.55o72.P467 2010

The Pendleton Round-Up is not the oldest rodeo in the country and not even close to the biggest. But according to the cowboys and cowgirls who compete there, it's one of the best - and far more than just a rodeo. This is the story of how, for the past 100 years, the people of small-town Pendleton and the Umatilla Indian Reservation have combined history, tradition and thrill-a-minute entertainment to help their community thrive.

Roll on Columbia: Woody Guthrie & the Bonneville Power Administration. DVD. Call # ML429.G95 R65 2000

In 1941, Woody Guthrie and his family left southern California for a job in Portland, Oregon writing songs for a documentary film about the dams being built on the Columbia River. The story is told through interviews with family and friends, and also through archival footage that includes scenes from both Hydro and The Columbia, documentaries made by the BPA's public information department in the late '30s and '40s
